

Formulation of Bylaws

The board's bylaws are rules designed to organize and control its internal operations. Some bylaws are set by statute. Others may be formulated and adopted at its option by the board itself, as long as they are in harmony with the intent and specifics of the statutes.

In its deliberations leading to the establishment or amendment of its bylaws, the board's central concern will be for increased efficiency and effectiveness in carrying out its legally mandated tasks.

The board will provide for the adopted or amendment of its bylaws only after at least two opportunities to read and discuss the proposal in successive regular meetings.
